A Spiritual Meditation for the 25th Sunday in Ordinary Time - Year C

The psalmist proclaims, "Praise the Lord, who lifts up the poor." In today's first reading, the Prophet Amos is ruthless in his denunciation of those who pretended to be religious but who were nevertheless dishonest in their daily lives. The connection between Amos and the Gospel is this. If we say that we are believers, then we must give witness to that faith in the way that we treat others. There is no wiggle room to allow the presence of the grave sins of hypocrisy and self-righteousness. Moreover, if we allow ourselves to take advantage of others, the Lord will remember our actions. The Lord reminds us to be prudent and just in our everyday life and mindful to remember that ultimately, it is our relationship with the Lord God that must be our top, paramount priority.

In the first letter to Timothy, the Apostle Paul asked the reader to pray for everyone, including the rulers and those in authority.

The parable in today's gospel is a bit odd. It seems almost as if it is promoting dishonesty. But the thrust of the story's end is this... "No servant can serve two masters... You cannot serve both God and mammon." The purpose-driven message is this. One must be prudent and trustworthy in managing worldly interests - so must we be even more so in service to God. Jesus shows us the gospel value of choosing to be poor according to the standards of the world in order that we might experience the riches of the Lord - who though rich, became poor for us, so that by his poverty we might become rich in faith and righteousness.
