A Spiritual Meditation for the 24th Sunday in Ordinary Time - Year A

The first reading for today comes out of the Wisdom literature of the Hebrew scriptures and our Christian Old Testament. The author speaks, writing in classical Hebrew, of how wrath and anger are not the ways of God. Sirach the author espouses mercy - mercy that both is given and received. We should not, however, be oblivious to wrongdoing. Mercy means that we are enjoined to hate the sin but love the sinner.

As the psalmist praises God and the liberating strength and power of mercy, so also the Apostle Paul speaks of the new life that the believer can find in Christ, who overcame death as the unbounded power of mercy and forgiveness. Thus God teaches us the true meaning of love by being willing to die for us.

The theme continues in today's gospel. What is the measure of love that we must have for each other? Jesus answers Peter's question, "how often must I forgive?" The rabbinical response from Jesus is unequivocal: not just seven times must we forgive - but seventy times seventy. And then, expansively, he tells a parable of the unforgiving servant.

Cautiously, we do well to understand forgiveness as the most Godly way that we can humanly do. Forgiveness implies that action of Jesus' healing on the cross. The death of Jesus is the incarnation of God's forgiving desire for reconciliation. Jesus died out of love for everyone, and in sequential propriety, we should conscientiously try to love others as God loves us. Although we may not be able to forget woundedness, we can never stop praying for each other. We must not stop prayer because praying is one of the most powerful expressions of love that we can ever do. Prayer invites and equips us to share in God's mercy.

St. Anthony M. Zaccarian Apostolate Prayer

September: May God the Father, who in Christ, the firstborn of all creation, called all things into existence, through the intercession of St. Francis of Assisi, help us to be docile to the life-giving breath of his Spirit, so that we may lovingly guard the work of his hands and, awaiting the new heavens and the new earth, learn to live in harmony with all creatures.

Intercession for Life

May our shrine community come together to become a place of welcoming and assistance for all mothers in need; let us pray to the Lord.
